Summary and Format

As always, the goal of CURE is to provide extensive discussion of new and innovative research in urban and regional economics. This year, CURE will use a novel format to maximize value to participants in the online environment.

All participants agree to read the papers in advance. Presenters have 10 minutes to make an opening statement. The rest of the hour is devoted to panelist-led discussion including all conference participants.

Paper sessions will use WebEx. Links to the papers and sessions will be e-mailed to participants and posted on the conference web page.

Participants may submit questions during the paper sessions or in advance of the conference via Sli.Do. Use a web browser or mobile device to access <https://www.sli.do> and enter the conference hashtag #cure2020. A host/moderator will manage the question queue will give participants an opportunity to ask their question during the paper session.

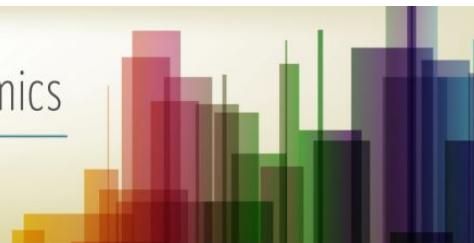

Social hours will take place on Gather.Town.
